- Deleting the extra EEO regulations imposed on broadcasters. We already have the EEOC so these regulations are redundant. In today's market, the broadcast industry has done a good job in including minorities so the FCC's EEO regulations, while useful at one time are no longer necessary.
- Deleting the Issues & Programs reporting. With the new media landscape this information is disseminated by various platforms. This is an unnecessary burden on the radio broadcast industry as a whole and on the FCC as well to police it
- Delete the restrictions on AM translators allowing them to originate programming and allowing AM operators to transfer their primary status to the translator. This would benefit the public by keeping these services available and to the broadcast industry as a whole allowing these stations to continue serving the public.
